MEAL TIME IN SUMMER.

Pew Pertinent Suggestions for Hom-Practice in the Heated Term. Roast pork, plum pudding and mince bie are now out of season. To think of these things in July gives most people a temporary thrill of discomfort. For winter dinners, especially at Thanksgiving and Christmas, they seem to have especial adaptation. Tradition sanctions them and custom brings them smoking hot upon our tables. Now that the heats of summer are testing our patience we want something as different as possible. All that is heavy and fat and gross is banished from the tables of those who best understand the art of living. The human body needs nourishment in July as it does in January, but that which in midwinter would comfortably feed it proves in the dog-days a grievous load. The people who in summer eat winter dinners are those who go about with a dismal feeling of oppression and a constant complaint that the weather is a great burden to them. Putting too great a strain upon their digestive appartus, they find that it groans and creaks under a burden which on Christmas or New Year's it might dispose of with reasonable safety.

It is a happy provision of Providence that in summer we are not diven for sustenance to heavy joints of meat or to solid rations of sausages or smoked and salted fish. We have fresh fish in abundance, and though brook trout are costly we can buy bass and cattlah and blueflab. hese things in July gives most people onable safety.

It is a happy provision of Providence that in summer we are not driven for sustenance to heavy joints of meat or to solid rations of sausages or smoked and salted fish. We have fresh fish in abundance, and though brook trout are costly we can buy bass and catfish and bluefish at prices within the reach of almost everybody. The lettuce family in all its varieties offers us light lunch with easy digestion. Though the oyster is in retirement the toothsome and appetizing clampatiently awaits his face. A list of constantly changing vegatables bewilders us as it invites us to make relection. As we begin to exhaust the wealth of its attractiveness new products of farm and truck garden are added to it for our nourishment and our delight. As berries run their course the larger fruits take their places. The harvest apple smiles upon us places. The harvest apple smiles upon us from the orchard with its big round face. The ugly little peach, which is ugly only because it is immature and knotty, rins at our children from its lurking grins at our contoren mon its arising riace on the fruit stand at the corner and tells us that before long we shall be reveling in the wealth of the orchards of Delaware and Maryland and of our own State, which, despite all the croaking of the owners, were not destroyed by the cruel trosts of March, April and May. The great green watermelon already journeys to us from the far South, and we shall soon have him fresh from neighboring patches. The shorter the melon's ride from where he was raised the better we like him Perhaps it is fanatical to want to go without meat, but if we want to be fanatical on this point we need not be fearful of starving to death on such a vegetarian diet as the markets now afford.

The kitchen commissariat in these hot days may safely be a very different affair from whey it is in winter If the entired of the summer meal is comparatively light work so may the preparation of it be lighter. There are many families of moderate size n which the light gas stoves may allow he great kitchen range a summer holiday. To build in the kitchen a fire big enough the great kitchen range a summer holiday. To build in the kitchen a fire big enough and hot enough to keep a locomotive going is altogether unnecessary. To keep a woman fretting and fuming and perspiring over such a heated abomination, merely that coffee may be prepared, or eggs boiled or bread tasated, is as abourd as it is inconsiderate. If we can keep the kitchen cooler, so we ought to put in the refrigerator all the angry passions and ugly thoughts which are at some seasons of the year allowed to come to the table. Wrangling is always out of order at meal times, but especially in summer. If people want to complain of theheat, or of the badness of their digestion, or of the crookedness of their meighbors, or of the perversity of the market man, or of the stupidity of the cook, or of the general degeneracy of the human race, let them go to the housetop for fifteen minutes before each meal, and have their couplaints out where they can disturb nobody. When we meet at the table let us be jolly and light of heart, and take our time to it and keep cool.

How the Democratic Candidate for Vice

The Hon. James W. Lanham, late a Representative in the Indiana Legislature from Jefferson county, has published in the Madison (Ind.) Courier, an interesting page from the record of the Hon. W. H. The Railroad up Vesuvius.

The excursion from Naples to the crate of Vesuvius can now be made in half a day and at an expense of $4. The old ays tem of being pulled and held up by guides is ended, and the weakest persons can now gratify their curiosity without fatigue.

The journey to Vesuvius is no more than that to Portici or Castellamare. The back of the Titan is now burdened with an apparatus for lifting two yellow cars, but Lowest... Variation how long it will please his capricious temper to let it stay there is uncertain. In the meantime, however, the money that $5 the meantime, however, the money that it has cost the constructor, Signor Obleight, will be fully repaid, as every body is impatient to try the new mode of ascension. The railroad is described as a gigantic ladder placed against an almost vertical wall 1200 feet high. This is the distance from the base of the cone to the crater; the observatory at the base of the cone being 2000 feet above the level of the sea.

The road has a slight inclination and is laid on the lava left by the eruption of 1872. The engineer, Dall 'Ongaro, who traced it in 90 days, had selected another
